SYNOPSIS

Prologue
The goddesses of Nature, Eternity, and Destiny celebrate the humans who have ascended to immortality, including Calisto.

Act I
Giove, god of gods, returns to Earth, accompanied by trusted Mercurio, to fix the natural world that has been ravaged by humans. They see the nymph Calisto, a mortal huntress and follower of the virgin goddess Diana, desperately seeking water in the charred forest.

Giove attempts to seduce Calisto, who resists his advances and proclaims her desire to remain a virgin forever. Giove then decides to transform himself into Diana to pursue Calisto. When Calisto returns to find her goddess, she enthusiastically runs off for a moment alone with her new lover.

The mortal Endimione pines for Diana, who secretly feels the same. Meeting in the newly restored woods, they hint at their feelings, causing Diana’s chief warrior-nymph Linfea to chase Endimione away. Calisto finds the real Diana and seeks to rekindle their flame, revealing how she broke her vow of chastity. Diana harshly rejects Calisto.

Left alone, Linfea ponders the complex, confusing nature of love and reveals her insatiable libido. Satirino appears and attempts to seduce Linfea, who is repulsed by these advances.

The woodland god Pane, who has also been rejected by Diana, broken-heartedly wanders the forest. Satirino and sidekick Sylvano attempt to cheer up the dejected god as night falls over the forest.

Act II
As night falls over the forest, Endimione falls asleep under the moon, dreaming of Diana. The goddess approaches the sleeping Endimione and cannot pull herself away. Upon awakening, Endimione and Diana learn of their mutual attraction. Having spied on the star-crossed lovers, Satirino swears to tell Pane of Diana’s unchaste love.

Giunone, the wife of Giove, discovers her husband’s infidelity. Having come down to Earth, she meets Calisto, who wanders lost and dejected. Giunone immediately understands the situation. When Giove appears again as Diana, the young nymph reconnects with her lover. Giunone, though fuming, feigns ignorance and questions “Diana” and Mercurio.

Endimione also mistakes “Diana” for her beloved and embraces the “virgin goddess.” Satirino leads Pane and Sylvano to the scene, where they capture Endimione. Satirino then spies the lustful Linfea and attempts to take her by force, to no avail.

At the command of the outraged Giunone, the furies torment Calisto, turning the innocent nymph into a bear. Meanwhile, Pane continues to torment Endimione but is rescued by the real Diana. She openly admits her love for Endimione at last.

In the end, Calisto’s fate is divinely sealed, and she ascends to the eternal firmament, becoming a constellation of stars in the night sky.

La Calisto was first performed in 1651 in Venice, making it one of the first operas composed in history. Inspired by Ovid’s Metamorphoses, Giove, king of the gods, transforms himself into the virgin goddess Diana to seduce one of her huntress followers, Calisto. Simultaneously, Diana falls in love with the peasant shepherd Endimione. The opera dives deep into matters of gender and power, sex and consent, revenge and justice, mortality and morality.

Reinterpreted through a queer, feminist lens, this production modernizes the mythology and contemporizes the Baroque opera so that it more deeply resonates in the twenty-first century. A nightclub, rave environment lends itself to this production as a place where sensual desires, illicit secrets, and primal behavior abound.

Sexual empowerment and female pleasure are central parts of this story. This staging recenters female sexuality. Seen through Calisto’s eyes, the titular character’s sexual awakening is with “Giove as Diana,” embodied and sung by Diana herself, allowing Calisto to have an intimate experience with the woman she loves. Furthermore, having Endimione present as feminine affirms Diana’s own sexuality. Queer love between women is at the heart of this show. I am proud to be a part of expanding a kind of representation that is rarely seen in opera.
